Leary, manager of the stock yards, is greatly interested in the project. "A commercial club will suc-ceed where a chamber of commerce will not," he said, "and it will do as much for the town and more. My idea would be to have first-class quarters fitted up in the center of the downtown district. One of the big features should be the restaurant, where two meals a day would be served. Another should be the lounging room or smoking room, Paris, where so much business is done in the cafes, and where there is some thing going on all the time. Well, I believe some of the same principles can be applied to a commercial club. This big lounging room would be a place where the members would gather and smoke and talk, and then if anybody had an idea he wanted to bring up, he could do so before the members as they were gathered there. It would be a sort of clearing house for ideas on matters of interest to the business men and to the city at large. All sorts of matters could be taken up there and discussed by the members as they got together, and important movements sta, if they had the approval of the club. The restaurant and lounging room would bring the business men into closer daily contact and would tend to make them act together whereever the general good was concerned.

Welcome Strangers. "Another feature, to my mind, should be a public room—the office of the sec-ctary or manager—which should be out in front on the ground floor, looking on one of the principal business streets. Here would be a place to streets. Here would be a place to which strangers would be welcome and where they could get information about the city and state. Of course, the secretary would also have charge of a large amount of outside advertising. Many other things would come up in connection, but I believe that a restaurant and lounging room for members and a bureau of information for the public would be three important factors in the success of the club."

growing out of the now famous Christham school on the closing day before

Behind locked doors that kept away the interested townspeople, they listened to testimony calculated to make clear to their minds whether Superintendent E. E. Dudley is the victim of two mischlevous young women, blind to the respect and deference due to a disciple of Socrates, or whether Misses Hazel Payne and Mamie Harris had Hazel Fayne and Mamie Harris had their Christmas plans spoiled by an urfeeling mortal incapable of appreciating the gentle spirit of the season. When the session ended the triumvirate looked wise. Then they sighed softly and looked wise again. The worked parents of some few score worried parents of some few score worried parents of some few score youngsters gathered to discuss in subdued whispers the prospects of the school remaining closed tomorrow, while the aforesaid youngsters went into ecstacies over the possibilities and devoutly hoped that the deadlock might continue until the millennium.

Dudley Tells Story. Principal Dudley was called before the august body. Plainly, firmly and without qualification he declared that his dignity as a principal had been trampled upon; that the Christmas episode had come as a climax to a series of annoyances and that the two teachers would have to applicate; othteachers would have to apologize; othteachers would have to apologize; otherwise they or he would leave the school forever. The former lawyer, who is now engaged in teaching the young idea to shoot, is said to have pleaded his case as he never pleaded a client's before a Salt Lake bar.

The young women, too, were called to relate their grievances and gave their version of the scenes that lent tone to the holiday festivities at Bing-ham town. When all had been heard the trustees took the matter under advisement and deferred further action until today. No secret was made of the fact that they regard the incident seriously as having completely demor-alized the discipline of the institution of learning and jeopardized its usefulness for the remainder of the term. Public opinion is still divided, though there is a tendency to support Dudley.

Principal Hard to Arouse. "Professor Dudley is an excellent teacher, but is too non-assertive and seldom interposes his authority when not absolutely called for," said a prominent resident of Bingham last evening. "It was this characteristic that brought on the trouble. There has been a disposition shown by the teachers to ignore the fact that they were under his direction, and it has happened on several occasions that Professor Dudley was locked out of the school by them. When he does take a stand he is extremely firm. This is something the teachers apparently did not know. not know

VENEZUELA'S LAST CHANCE

Germany's Demands Couched in a Polite Note to Castro.

Berlin, Jan. 4.-Herr von Pilgrim Baltazzi, the German charge d'affaires at Caracas, handed President Castro a fresh note on Thursday reciting in simple language what Germany desires Venezuela to do respecting all her claims and the questions in dispute.

An official of the foreign office has informed the correspondent of the Associated Press that the new note is so phrased that no possible offense can be taken. It contains no suggestion of an ultimatum and no time limit for compliance with the terms of the note is named, though in presenting it the charge de'affaires asked for an early
